

1. I think I've thrown out at least one of every one of these in my lifetime.
2. I know what this does, I think, but I don't know what to call it.
3. What the heck is this stuff?!

A couple from Texas told us, "We've discovered that antique tractor pulls are not exactly a high-energy spectator sport."

A young girl was studying Gary's old telephone. Her father explained that this is what people used before they had cell phones.

Daughter: "But it won't fit in your pocket and it's too heavy to carry around."

Father: "You couldn't carry it around because it was plugged into the wall. You had to sit by the phone to talk."

Daughter: (in total disbelief): "You're kidding me, right?"

Question: Why do you use a hog oiler on your hogs?

Answer: To keep the little pigs from squeaking.

One woman to another: "If I had just used that bull calf docker on my first husband, I'd have saved myself a whole lot of trouble."

OJ parked a unique tractor he built right outside the Mercantile. He told us we were welcome to fire it up and drive it around if we wanted, but said there was one thing we had to remember to do. "Pack lunch. It's really slow."

In closing: You might be a redneck if you're thinking about buying your wife an old manure spreader for her anniversary. (Hint to John: you better plant flowers in it.)
